Birds FROM HADES

"YOU'RE taking a terrible chance, Vale," said Capt. Raine, "but if you succeed it will be a worthy undertaking."

Eric Vale nodded. He was seated in the office of Public Affairs in Miami. He had before him a strange record. It was a record of lost flyers. It covered a period of three years. Flyers who had gone in search of their buddies—and never come back.

"How many in all have been lost?" Eric asked the captain.

The latter consulted the list. "Nine. We have often thought that Paul Redfern was one of them. You see, we can't know because there has never been a single one return from this mission."

"A sort of lost cause," grinned Eric. "Well, there is only one way to learn and thus solve this mystery. That's to take a flier on it. When do I start?"

The captain looked long at this courageous young flyer. "Then you are serious, eh? Good. Can you be ready by day after tomorrow? The ship will be ready by then."

Eric got up. "That's good enough with me. I'll be on hand Tuesday morning."

It was a weird enough mission Eric Vale was starting out on. Over a period of several years, nine aviators had flown into a certain district of Brazil. The first one had gone in search of riches—a great hoard of gold was said to be stored in a certain Matte Grasso canon deep in the interior of Brazil. That first flyer had never been heard of. The others had all gone looking for each succeeding flyer who didn't return. None of them did.

It would be a feather in anybody's cap who laid this ghost of the airplanes. What happened to those flyers?

Of course, there was no denying that it was a suicidal job. If nine expert flyers had been lost, what chance did the tenth have against whatever jinx it was that caused them to be unheard of?

Eric was fully aware of the chance he was taking, but there was nothing else for it; besides, he had the blood of the adventurer. He wanted action. He was accustomed to danger in various forms. This might turn into a lark. Or—what?

The Matte Grasso is a vast, matted, dense jungle almost totally impenetrable. An airman forced to land in this enormous region of great trees and thick brush hasn't a chance of getting out. Trails must be hacked through any portion of it with machetes.

Whenever a plane goes down in this area of Brazil, it is simply marked off as "lost."

Would Eric return? Would he discover the solution of the mystery? Time would tell.

His small, fast plane was fitted out with a long-range radio, two-way, so that he could keep in touch with the outside. It had extra large gas tanks. There was a young arsenal aboard, including poison gas bombs, and several explosive bombs—just in case.

He took off early on the following Tuesday morning, heading south, making fueling stops at a couple of spots. In Rio, he had a chat with the chief of police, Senor Ricorro, who advised him against wasting his young life.

Eric laughed at him, and took off just at sunset. He would be in a spot far up the Plata the next morning, where he would establish a sort of headquarters base from which to conduct his flights. The chief of police had promised to have several drums of fuel and oil flown in to this spot within the next few days.

When Eric sat down in this region, he looked around with a wry grin. Jungle. Solid, black jungle. A fellow was utterly trapped in a place like this. Without a plane, it would be many days of paddling a dugout down the Plata to civilization. He hoped he would have no trouble with the ship.

The next couple of days, Eric studied maps and made experimental flights in every direction. At last he found what he sought—a tiny depression far down in a cup of towering mountains. That would be the canon where lurked the mystery. He flew back to his camp and made ready for the morrow's trek.

Wearing a double parachute, he climbed into the plane and took off early in the morning, while the mists still rose from the river. In two hours he was over the canon. It looked too small for a plane to land. And if he managed to bring the ship down in that hole, how was he to get out? Or maybe it was larger than it looked from 4,000 feet.

It was. Spiraling downward, Eric was surprised to find the canon widening, until it was fully three miles across, and almost round. At 3,000 feet, he saw a speck on the south horizon. The speck grew rapidly and he wondered what the heck it was. Then the speck became several specks. Dozens of them, in fact.

"Birds!" gasped Eric. "But my gosh, what kind of birds?"

The flight of great birds drew closer. They were the largest birds Eric ever heard of. Bigger than the legendary rock Condors! But great guns, he thought, these condors have a wing-spread of thirty feet!

The birds came on, a black flapping mass. They didn't veer from the path of the speeding plane. Before Eric could decide what to do, the whole pack was upon him. The propeller splintered off, the mass of birds crammed into the ship, hurtling it over.

Eric cut the ignition to prevent fire, and tried to wriggle out of the cockpit. He was upside down. The birds were everywhere around, and their screams were maniacal to hear. At last he got loose and dropped through the mass. He waited until he was about 500 feet from the ground before he opened his pack. The birds were on his tail, darting and slashing with great beaks and enormous talons.

He landed in a clump of thorny bushes, the chute collapsing over him. That's what saved his life. The birds were stymied, seeing him disappear under the white canopy. They cawed and screamed a while, then flapped away.

He heard the plane crash a few hundred yards off. There was no explosion, and he thanked Allah for that. The instruments would probably be intact.

After a moment he crawled out into the open. The birds were nowhere to be seen. But scattered all over a wide area were the shattered bits of plane wreckage he knew he'd find. Planes of every vintage and make. He examined some of the junk, then took a look at his own wreckage. It would never fly again, but the radio was okay. He could get someone to fly in and snatch him out of this mess.

He made another discovery not far away: the scattered bones of a man. There were several ~~pieces~~ of whitened bones. So the poor chap had been killed when the birds attacked their ships, then the hungry demons had eaten the flesh off their bones.

"Ugh!" he said.

It was late that afternoon that he made his great discovery. He was walking along a rough gully looking at the towering walls of rock that surrounded the valley when he saw a misshapen figure sitting in the mouth of a cave. Eric called out. The figure lifted its head. It was a man, all right, but such a man!

Eric hurried up to the cave entrance. The fellow had a beard that reached to his knees, but he was not old, not over twenty-eight, Eric decided.

"Who are you?" Eric asked him.

The strange creature just looked at him. Then Eric saw that he was off the beam, queer in the head. He broke into a babbling chatter and began laughing in a weird manner.

"Shut up!" Eric ordered. "Listen to me. Who are you? I'm here to help you. Radio. We'll radio out and a plane will be sent in for us. Can you hear me?"

The creature simply stared. Then he let out a scream and pointed into the north. The mass of giant birds were coming, flying low over the ground. The creature made a flying dive for the cave entrance, Eric following. They were none too quick. The birds landed outside, fighting and screaming to get into the cave. It was too small for their great bodies.

"Whew!" said Eric, wiping the moisture off his face. "That was close."

The bearded fellow was crawling toward the rear of the cavern. Eric followed. Then he came upon a startling sight. A golden altar. A vast, solid gold altar from some church, here in this cave! Then he saw other golden relics—sacred relics. He estimated the riches at a million dollars. So this was the hidden cache those other flyers had heard about.

The bearded one was babbling and fondling the yellow trinkets, and babbling childishly over them.

Eric nodded. So that was how it was. The poor devil had gone mad over gold. Or perhaps it had been the terror of the birds, plus the loneliness. He hoped doctors could do something with his mind. It would be interesting to hear the man's story.

When the birds left the cave entrance, Eric crawled out and ran to the wrecked plane. He quickly had the radio going, and Rio in contact. He gave a graphic picture of what he had found, directions for flying to the canon, then signed off to wait.

What's My Job? - I Manufacture Weaklings into MEN!

Charles Atlas

Actual Photograph of the man who holds the title "The World's Most Perfectly Developed Man."

GIVE ME a skinny, peepless, second-rate body—and I'll cram it so full of handsome, bulging new muscle that your friends will grow bug-eyed! . . . I'll wake up that sleeping energy of yours and make it hum like a high-powered motor! Man, you'll feel and look different! You'll begin to LIVE!

Let Me Make YOU a NEW MAN —IN JUST 15 MINUTES A DAY!

You wouldn't believe it, but I myself used to be a 97-lb. weakling. Fellows called me "Skinny" or "Grip" and made fun of me behind my back. I was a flop. THEN I discovered my marvelous new muscle-building system—"Dynamic Tension." And it turned me into such a complete specimen of MANHOOD that today I hold the title "THE WORLD'S MOST PERFECTLY DEVELOPED MAN."

That's how I traded in my "bag of bones" for a barrel of muscle! And I felt so much better, so much on top of the world in my big, new, husky body, that I decided to devote my whole life to helping other fellows change themselves into "perfectly developed men."

What Is "Dynamic Tension"? How Does It Work?

When you look in the mirror and see a healthy, husky, strapping fellow smiling back at you—then you'll be astounded at how short a time it takes "Dynamic Tension" to GET RESULTS!

"Dynamic Tension" is the easy, NATURAL method you can practice in the privacy of your own room—JUST 15 MINUTES EACH DAY—while your scrawny shoulder muscles begin to swell, ripple . . . those spindly arms and legs of yours bulge and your whole body starts to feel "alive," full of zip and go!

One Postage Stamp May Change Your Whole Life!

As I've pictured up above, I'm steadily building broad-shouldered, dynamic MEN—day by day—the country over.

2,000,000 fellows, young and old, have already gambled a postage stamp to ask for my FREE book. They wanted to read and see for themselves how I'm building up scrawny bodies, and how I'm paring down fat, flabby ones—how I'm turning them into breath-taking human dynamos of real MANPOWER.

Take just a few seconds NOW to fill in and mail the coupon at right, and you will receive at once my FREE book—"Everlasting Health and Strength" that PROVES with actual snap-shots what "Dynamic Tension" has done for others—what it can do for YOU!
